805 as an abstract sequence of names of which certain have an emo-
872 tional significance as being a period containing a birthday or Christmas, but the Bemba child is delighted with the appearance of each new crescent and lives a more exciting life during the full moon. He only gradually learns at about 9 or 10 that certain of these moons coincide with particular economic tasks, and later still, as an adult, he is able to recite all the moons in order and to discourse wisely on the whole sequence of the calendar.

805 Before the coming of the white man, the Bemba had apparently 177 no smaller subdivision of the month than the day. They have now completely adopted the English week, even in remote spots of the country where no one is working for a European. Every native keeps the Christian Sunday, known as the 'day of God', nshiku ya Mulungu, from which term the week itself is known as Mulungu, the word for God, and the days called the first, second, third, fourth, &c. (pali cimo, pali cibili, &c.). The conception of the week has been incorporated in Bemba economic life since it coincides with an adoption of the European rhythm of work and system of payment, and the acceptance for the first time of a time interval which is also a period of work. Wage-earners calculate their weeks of service, and chiefs who formerly called up tribute labourers when they were required now state their dues in precise terms, as for instance three days a week.

805 The Bemba word for night is ubushiku, and for day akasuba. In any one day the time is divided into three. Dawn is a fixed event (bwaca), and the period from dawn till midday is known as ulucelo. Midday, from 11 till about 3 o'clock, is called akasuba, the ordinary word for sun, and the period from 3 to 6, i.e. the time of sunset, is known as icungulo. Thus a man who wants to make an appoint-
●[695] ment with a friend does so to the nearest two or three hours, by telling him to come in the morning, at midday, or in the evening, and when acting as a witness at a legal court can place events in this manner, usually giving additional precision to his statement by raising his arm to point to the exact position of the sun in the sky at the time referred to, e.g. at 11 or 3, and adding, 'The sun was like this' (kasubefi).

805 It is hardly ever necessary to fix time in the night, but the 513 natives speak of 'the middle of the night' (pakati ka bushiku) and will also reckon time by the number of turns they have made in their sleep, since these people apparently wake more or less regutwelve uniformed messengers, kapasus, and for the rest they go short of service.

(b) Military. There was no general military organization in this tribe, but attached to each big court were one or two captains (bashika). Some of these were hereditary, with ritual functions connected with war magic, and others appointed at the chief's will. They now act as specially trusted messengers.

(c) Judicial. There is no fixed composition to a Bemba court, although its procedure is laid down by custom. At a small chief's court, the elderly men of the village attend, while the bafilolo act as advisers at the big imisumba. Cases go on appeal from sub-chief to chief, chief to paramount, and in the event of a case of extreme difficulty presenting itself, the Citimukulu can summon from their villages some of his hereditary priests or councillors, the bakabilo (cf. below). Witnesses are brought by each party to a case and are marshalled by the bafilolo. The senior man present claps as each point is made to mark the recognition of the court, and the chief himself finally sums up and gives judgement. The advisers speak when asked a point of precedent or law, and influence the chief's final decision by black looks or alternatively enthusiastic clappings of the hand.

(d) Advisory. There is no council or meeting of all the adult men of the tribe for special occasions, as among many Southern Bantu. Sub-chiefs have a panel of village elders and relatives to advise them, while the biggest territorial chiefs have hereditary officials who combine political and judicial with ritual functions. In the case of the paramount, these officials—the bakabilo—number between thirty-five and forty and form an advisory council on special matters of State. The bakabilo have been described as having descent as long as that of the chief himself in many cases and possess sacred relics in their own rights. The power of these relics is so strong that the Citimukulu is not permitted to pass through their villages for fear that one chieftainship should harm the other. Bakabilo are immune from tribute, wore special feather head-dresses in the old days, and even now claim special respect equal to that given to a chief when travelling about the country. They call themselves Fwe Babemba ('We, the Babemba'), may not leave the central territory (Lubemba) for long, must be buried within the royal district, and keep sex taboos similar to those of the chiefs. They succeed by a special accession
